Instructions

Objective: Individually create a detailed design treatment for an original board game, covering the concept, gameplay mechanics, visual style, target audience, and inclusivity features. This foundational work will lead to further development phases.

1. Work on the below tasks (recommended to do in the order provided). 2, After you have the core concepts/sketches seek external feedback from 3 different people, preferably people from your target audience
2. Once all items are filled out, ensure this worksheet is saved and explore the PDF
3. Upload the PDF to a branch called `DesignTreatment` on GitHub
4. Create a pull request to main, and complete the merge
5. Upload the same PDF to Canvas

Section #1: ( 2 pts.) Crafting The Game Treatment

Progress: 100%

Task #1 ( 0.29 pts.) - Possible Title(s) of the Game

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Propose fitting title(s) reflecting the game's essence
- Explanation of title(s) choices

Your Response:

The Paper Elite Firstly, it's a card game where you fight people who are rich, famous, powerful, or all of the above. Additionally, the title takes a shot at the "Elite", accusing them of being as thin as paper, lacking authenticity and depth.

Task #2 ( 0.29 pts.) - Game Setting

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Thoroughly describe the setting

Your Response:

Paperville: the 2d world the game takes place in, given its name because it is 2D. Slipping: the term given to the act of falling through the fabric of our 3d reality and getting turned 2d in the process The Paper Games (AKA The Elite): the official title (and alternate, mocking title) of the games that are run for the amusement of the Paperville elite. The prize: you can take their personal portal back to the 3D world. The cost of failure: no one but the elite truely know

Task #3 ( 0.29 pts.) - Game Characters

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Thoroughly describe the characters

Your Response:

The player: one of many unwilling residents of Paperville, having taken a Slip from the real world, and in the process, turned nearly two-dimensional. You were lucky; you didn't change too much otherwise when you fell through. But you want out. When you landed, the Wise One found you, helped you understand your situation, and took you under his wing. You've done your research, you tried to find another way, but like all those before you, you found yourself eventually training for the games. Now you're ready, The Wise One said you're ready, so go, enter the collesium.

The Wise One: an old sage, who slipped long before anyone currently in Paperville. He never attempted the games, but has been coaching contestants as far back as people can remember. How he takes it, seeing generation after generation of paperians fall victim to the Elite...

The Elite: a cabal of the rich, powerful, and famous that slipped early on. They seized power, locked up the portal, and started hosting the games. It seems like they like it here and would rather stay in their tower than go back to the real world.

Task #4 ( 0.29 pts.) - Game Theme

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Thoroughly describe the theme

Your Response:

The theme of the game centers around a dystopian 2D paper world, where the Elite have taken over, taking with them all opulence. The residents of Paperville, however, are left to live in squalor.

Task #5 ( 0.29 pts.) - Game Story

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Thoroughly describe the story

Your Response:

The story of this game follows the player as they fight through the layers of the game, attempting to reach the top and conquer "The Elite." The story is laid out below, in a speech from The Wise One to the player when the player first slips.

In the land of Paperville, where everyone is as thin as paper, there exists a deadly tournament. Officially, it is called "The Paper Games", but we commonfolk mockingly refer to it as "The Elite." Because that's who always wins. And if you lose, well, they take you. It's all laid out in the contract that you agree to; they'll provide for you, train you, to become "better", to become "stronger." It's all a lie, though, it's gotta be. No one ever comes back. They say if one of us wins, the winner is allowed to use the Elite portal – go back to the real world. There's only ever been one winner, back in the early days of the game, back when I still had color in my beard. He went by Kay. He was one of the first of us; both he and I came here from the same Slip. He had a fire like I'd never seen before, a need to break out, to escape. He is the one who made it out, the only one. That fire rarely appears nowadays, around once a chapter. You have that fire. You have the courage. And you have the need. So go, train, face the elite, make it out, get us help, so one day we may all be free.

get us help, so one day we may all be free.

Task #6 ( 0.29 pts.) - Objectives and Conflicts

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Describe the goals and challenges within the game

Your Response:

The goal in the Paper Games is to fight through the layers of The Elite to reach the top of their tower and take their portal home to the real world. However, every floor houses one of them. No one knows which elite will be where until they step foot on the next floor. Fight through all 10 layers, and you're at the top.

Task #7 ( 0.29 pts.) - Game Mechanics

Progress: 100%

Details:

- List each mechanic with supporting details to clearly portray the mechanic

Your Response:

This game is a turn-based card game, where you face a line of increasingly difficult bosses on your quest to escape Paperville. You draw cards from your deck and use them to attack, block, and use special abilities in your attempts to run the gauntlet. When you defeat a boss, you can take an option from their toolkit and add it to your own. If you die, you restart, all the way back at the bottom.

Section #2: ( 1 pt.) Target Audience Analysis

Progress: 100%

Task #1 ( 1 pt.) - Identify and analyze the game's target audience

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Clearly identify the target audience
- Include analysis of demographics, interests, and gaming habits
- Justification of appeal to target audience

Your Response:

The intended audience of this game is fans of roguelike games and people who enjoy games with Cards Against Humanity-like humor or typical Jackbox humor. This game makes jokes at the expense of the in-game Elite (who may or may not bear some or all resemblance to the rich, famous, and powerful of our world), the types of which may turn off the average board game enthusiast, but people who play games like Jackbox and Cards Against Humanity love. Additionally, the roguelike aspect of the game, with the repeated climbs, draws in fans of roguelikes like Slay the Spire, The Binding of Issac, and more.

Section #3: ( 1 pt.) Accessibility And Inclusivity Strategies

Progress: 100%

Task #1 ( 1 pt.) - Outline strategies to make your game accessible and inclusive

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Include considerations for diverse abilities
- Outline inclusivity strategies for a wide audience
- Discuss implementation of noted inclusivity strategies without compromising gameplay

Your Response:

To make the game more accessible, I plan on using multiple accessibility features, including a colorblind friendly color palette, large print that contrasts against its background, and clear and consistent layouts.

Section #4: ( 2 pts.) Pitch Preparation

Section #4: ( 2 pts.) Pitch Preparation

Progress: 100%

Task #1 ( 2 pts.) - Pitch

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Summarize concept and theme
- Compellingly highlight target audience and unique selling points
- Emphasize how the game stands out in the current market

Your Response:

My idea is a roguelike cardgame with the humor of Cards Against Humanity. The idea is to take shots at rich, powerful, and famous people to bring them a bit down off their pedestal in the eyes of the public. The game follows a dystopian 2d world where people from our world "slip" down a dimension, and in this 2d world of Paperville, the elite have grown bored of their control and have implemented a tournament, called The Paper Games. The prize: a way home. The cost of losing: they make you disappear. The target audience of this game is people who like roguelikes and people who like dark(ish) humor. Our unique selling points and how we stand out in the current market are the same. People in today's day and age are starting to get fed up with people who they feel have too much power, influence, and money. This game makes light of and allows people to laugh at people in these groups, while still enjoying a fun, strategic card game.

Section #5: ( 2 pts.) Visualizing The Game Concept

Progress: 100%

Task #1 ( 2 pts.) - Sketches/Storyboard

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Provide at least two sketches
- Sketches should accurately represent the game's concept and theme
- Sketches/storyboards should be coherent with game's style and theme

Section #6: ( 2 pts.) External Feedback

Progress: 100%

Task #1 ( 0.67 pts.) - Feedback 1

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Note the person's name and relation to you
- Summarize feedback focusing on concept, mechanics, and style
- Reflect on how the feedback will be used to refine the design

Your Response:

Burhan - Friend

Burhan reccomends I flesh out the setting and theme of the game. Currently, I have the story nailed down, but without being able to immerse oneself in a setting and theme to let the story play out in, it's just a card game with its game mechanics. He also mentioned that being able to play as the elite would be fun, which I agree with and was initially considering, but I settled on a Slay the Spire-esque climb, and I don't know if implementing playing as the elite is feasible atm.

In my current design, the setting is mostly nonexistent, aside from being in Paperville, with references of slipping from the real world. I will be changing this around before I submit. Additionally,

Task #2 ( 0.67 pts.) - Feedback 2

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Note the person's name and relation to you
- Summarize feedback focusing on concept, mechanics, and style
- Reflect on how the feedback will be used to refine the design

Your Response:

Arav - Roommate

Change the paper-specific words and puns to be more unique and more in context with the paper's theme. Maybe like a house of cards as the tower, made up of past failed challengers, the more the challengers fail, the higher the tower grows. Losers add to the decoration of the layer, maybe each of the inital layers are the story of the people who lost.

I do plan on improving the paper puns, and i like the idea of implementing failed chalengers into the theme/setting in some way (if i can).

Task #3 ( 0.67 pts.) - Feedback 3

Progress: 100%

Details:

- Note the person's name and relation to you
- Summarize feedback focusing on concept, mechanics, and style
- Reflect on how the feedback will be used to refine the design

Your Response:

Leo - Roommate I'd love to know more about the people who live there, and how sucky it is to live there. Flesh out the in-game world and lore more. All the characters need to have paper puns, like origami something something. The story was really good, and I really liked it.
